Is animal testing OK?

a) Read Mary's blog entry.

Last night I watched a programme about animal testing on TV. I think such tests are awful. It's really bad to do tests on animals. I really ask myself why people are so horrible. I'm sure that animals have feelings, too. That's why I don't like eating animals. I think that I should become a vegetarian.

The programme showed how they were testing cosmetics on cats. I can't understand this at all. I won't look more beautiful just because they tested cosmetics on cats. And we aren't the same as animals, so why should we test things on them? It just isn't fair to test drugs and things on animals if they still aren't safe for humans.

I told my brother Dave that the tests were wrong. I asked him what he thought about them. My dear brother started an argument with me. He says that I'm talking nonsense. He says that I don't think right. They have tested drugs on animals and are now saving people's lives with these drugs. Vaccines or penicillin are examples of this. That really made me think again ... Perhaps it's not so easy after all? Perhaps Dave's right? Maybe the tests can be done carefully so that the animals aren't in any pain. Then I guess it's OK to do them.

I was at the hairdresser's today and asked the hairdresser if the shampoo had been tested on animals. She said she had tested it herself. She had washed her cat with the shampoo, and the cat was fine. I don't think she knew what I was talking about ...

b) Who says or thinks what? Mary or Dave? Write M or D in the boxes.

I think I should become a vegetarian.

You're talking nonsense.

We aren't the same as animals.

I guess it's OK to do tests on animals if they aren't in any pain.

I'm sure that animals have feelings, too.

They can save people's lives with drugs that they've tested on animals.

c) Read Mary's blog entry again. What is her opinion about animal testing? What are her arguments?

Mary likes ...	•	Mary doesn't like ...	•	She thinks ...
